The Grecian Bend.
A Louisville paper writes as follows apropos of the first appearance of a case of Grecian bend in that city:

She stepped upon the platform— Her grace I can't forget— For oh that Grecian bend of hers Clings to my memory yet.

Her smile was like the sunbeam, Her bonnet "some," you bet; But that lovely Grecian bend of hers Was the "heavenly" bend I met.

Her waterfall was gorgeous, And all who saw content That her grace was never equaled By the Saratoga bend.

But alas! for maiden beauty, Dust will return to dust, And the most enchanting bender Is doomed to melt and rust.

In stooping to assume her seat, (I hate to tell, but must,) Some "whalebone" thing that staid her up Bent double—and then "bust!"

She softly sighed and sweetly smiled, And then in accents tender, "Thank Heaven, I'm off my hinder!"

Old Mr. and Mrs. Blair as they Ride into Washington.

A friend describes to us the appearance of old Mr. and Mrs. Blair as they ride into Washington city. He is now 78 years old, and his wife is 76. They live six miles from Washington, at a country seat in Maryland, known as Silver Spring. Nearly every day they both ride into Washington on horseback; and when they do not come to Washington, they ride as far in the opposite direction. Mr. Blair wears a broad-brimmed, slouched hat, and looks like the relic of a century ago. He is every thing; his legs are hardly larger than a common horse's wrist; and, by the time he gets into the city, his trousers have slipped half way up to his knees.

Mrs. Blair, who is a robust, stout, fine-looking old lady, wears a broad, Quaker sunbonnet, made of pasteboard slips, so that she can gather it all up together in her hand, and a white, dainty short dress. Mr. Blair always rides about a length and a half of the horse ahead of her. He rides up to the steps in front of Montgomery Blair's house, throws the reins down on the horse's neck, dismounts, and proceeds directly up the steps. The horse droops his head and stands still. Directly Mrs. Blair rides up, switches her husband's horse out of the way, gets off her horse, and follows her husband into the house.

One end of this house is occupied by Montgomery Blair—Mr. Blair's eldest son—a graduate of West Point, once a Judge in Missouri, an office-holder under Lincoln, a friendly man, a first-rate orator, and a very virulent politician and stump-speaker; and the other end is occupied by Rear-Admiral Lee, who married the only daughter of old Mr. Blair, and made $90,000 prize-money before he stopped the rebels from running the blockade at Wilmington during the late war. (The mansion where Montgomery Blair lives, and where old Mr. and Mrs. Blair alight as they ride into Washington, is one in which Mr. Senator Benton formerly lived. It is situated across the street, in front of the White House and nearly opposite the War Department.)

Old Mr. Blair was originally engaged in banking in Kentucky. He was brought to Washington by Gen. Jackson, between whom and himself a warm and life-long friendship subsisted.

The old Globe, edited by him and published by Blair & Rives, was the great organ of the Democratic party in the days of Jackson, and was a power in the land. The Blairs and the Fremonts were strong friends until the separation which took place between them at St. Louis during the war, and which
